

Berlin

„Culture can be anything, a human has created or shaped.“

In the sense of this little quote, this flyer does not deal with sightseeing or facts and figures. No. Who cares and who would read it? Boring! You have Google for that. Here we will present the beginning of all culture, that means... right, the people. And don't expect to actually learn anything.

With this flyer you will get an impression of the German top 5 cities, but from our perspective.

Please enjoy.

The People in Berlin are commonly known as being very outspoken. So, if you think, they don't like you or they are inpolite. Nope, they are just inhabitants of Berlin.

And yes, the buildings and the looks of formerly East Berlin may be striking you as „communism“, but Berlin is just in dept. But don't mention it, because they would say it's „urban-style“, clearly.

And what about nightlife?

When it comes to that, you can't have a better city than Berlin.

The best known Club in Berlin is the „Berghain“. It's an exclusive rave and techno club, but you will never get in. If you want to feel like a „Berliner“ ... wait in line. But, hey, it's alright, you will get to know the others in the line, over night.

Cologne

Yeah, Cologne they're some crazy people there. And for those who don't know the term „Karneval“, in short it's a big party in which everyone clothes up badly throwing candies towards the children.

In Cologne they're so euphoric about Karneval that the party lasts from the 11th November to the day called „Rosenmontag“ which mostly takes place in February or March. -The alcoholic industries high, if you know what I mean.-

Fun Fact: The dialect of Cologne is called „Kölsch“ in which many words are actually inspired by French. Also their beer is called „Kölsch“.

Cologne is not really a beautiful city and the people are a little bit patriotic -in addition to their city-. If you hear the name of their soccer club „1. FC Köln“. 10 times in under 5 minutes, you will at least know that you're right, if your destination is Cologne.

Hamburg

Hamburg; oh that smelly town, it's a port, so they have a lot of fish up there. Hamburg is a city with many contrasts, but first the people. People from Hamburg are tremendously diverse.

And so it happens that they have characteristics like being open, kind and tolerant and on the other hand are stubborn, reserved and stiff.

If you want to experience everything in one night, this will be your City:

From the orchestra in the beautiful and quite expensive Elbphilharmonie down to the red-light district „Reeperbahn“. Thats kind of their thing.

Dresden

Sorry Dresden, but I didn't know what to write about you and the people who live there, just unspectacular. You may think and I thought that too. But Dresden is actually one of the cities with the best and nicest views and the Semper Opera is a must.

At least now something about the people. Well... who would have guessed that, but they also have a dialect, a typical East German dialect which makes other Germans laugh... hard.

Munich

In Munich just don't speak with somebody. You will never understand them. Not only that the dialect is kind of another language, they really hope that it could become one.

They're friendly as well, but let us say... in their own kind of way.

The kind of Germans with the leather pants you may know, otherwise if you don't know that tradition, never mind.

You may think that it's impossible that a catholic and conservative area in Germany is responsible for a party like „Oktoberfest“ or „Wiesen“ as it's called. The main aspects there, and don't let anybody tell you differently, are drinking, drinking and drinking... then you will experience the main attraction: a brotherly line up with the others, puking in a row.

Living your very german dream...
